Fifth Sunday in Ordinary Time

The Story and You

I wish you could see the banquet of brilliance I chow through every week as I ponder the Sunday readings. I go first to Words of Grace and read the fascinating insights there, squeezed into 130 scrupulously edited words. I love the diverse variety of spiritual writers in Give us this Day. This week, of course, they called on Kathleen Norris to address the ennui of Job. She's Christianity's expert on soul sadness. I never miss the scripture reflections from St. Louis University. John Pilch addresses the different kinds of fevers Peter's mother-in-law may have had. Reginald Fuller shows the ingenious connections between the readings, and how beautifully today's psalm—he heals the brokenhearted and binds up their wounds—speaks to despondent Job as well as that jubilant woman who, upon being healed, immediately rises and serves.

The great scholar Dennis Hamm, SJ, notes that Jesus is all about relationships. If there is sorrow or illness or demon possession in the life of anyone he loves—that would be YOU, by the way—he intends to be there, to lay hands and say, "Get up."

I try to be completely open-minded about all of these insightful scholars, but once I click on John Kavanaugh, SJ I'm gone. He points his arrow of insight straight at my heart, and pierces me every time. This week's clincher: The call of the wounded is not merely some problem to solve or avoid; it is an invitation to love's redemptive power. I immediately flash on a dozen experiences in my life just this week that bear that out, and as I experience the delicious awareness of the Healer abiding with me I feel like 7-Up all over.

In what ways have you been aware of Christ "abiding" with you this week?
